‘Why Do Some Men Use Violence Against Women and How Can We Prevent It?’

United Nations Multi-Country Study on Men and Violence in Asia and the Pacific, conducted by Partners for Prevention, a UN Development Programme (UNDP), UN Population Fund (UNFPA), UN Women and UN Volunteers (UNV) regional joint programme

The following team members are available for interview

James Lang is the Programme Coordinator for Partners for Prevention. He has over fifteen years of professional experience working on issues of gender-based violence prevention and engaging boys and men in gender justice. Previous to Partners for Prevention, James served as UNDP’s Regional Gender Programme Advisor for the Asia-Pacific region. He worked for various UN agencies in Asia and the Americas, as well as the Family Violence Prevention Fund in San Francisco USA, and Oxfam Great Britain in the UK. He has published numerous articles and edited books on gender, masculinities and violence prevention and is an active trainer on these topics.

Emma Fulu is the Research Specialist of Partners for Prevention. Emma is a highly qualified researcher and practitioner with over ten years of experience on gender-based violence research and related programme and policy development. Her primary focus has been violence against women, gender, masculinities and Islam. Emma has a PhD from the University of Melbourne and prior to Partners for Prevention, worked as a research advisor in Melanesia and Micronesia and coordinated the first-ever national survey on violence against women in the Maldives. Her first book Domestic Violence in Asia: Globalization, Gender and Islam in the Maldives was published in 2013.
Professor Rachel Jewkes is the Acting Vice-President for Research Support and Director of the Gender and Health Research Unit of the Medical Research Council of South Africa. She is an Honorary Professor at the University of the Witwatersrand School of Public Health and Secretary of the Sexual Violence Research Initiative. A public health physician, she has spent nearly 20 years undertaking ethnographic and epidemiological research with men and women on gender and sexuality, mainly in South Africa.
